Saint Thérèse of Lisieux

The Little Flower

(Feast Day - October 01)

In 1873, Thérèse was born in the small French town of Alençon and was raised in a loving family with her four sisters. Like any child, Thérèse enjoyed playing with her cousins and siblings. When Thérèse was four her mother died, and her father moved the family to Lisieux, a town about 50 miles away, so that he and his daughters could live with his brother. Thérèse's older sister, Pauline, became like a second mother to her.

At the age of 15, Thérèse became a Carmelite nun, following in the footsteps of her three older sisters, including Pauline. As a young nun, she saw a vision of the baby Jesus. She believed this was a sign from God. To her, it was a reminder that even though she was a small woman, she was great and strong through her love of God.

Thérèse knew that she would never be able to perform great deeds, but she proved her love for God by doing little things that received no recognition. She smiled at people she did not like. She ate whatever was on her plate without complaining. She took the blame when she was not the one at fault. She called this "the little way." This "little way" has become a model for ordinary people who are seeking to live holy lives.

Thérèse was also a very good writer. She wrote an autobiography that tells the story of her life and her love for God. People today still read this book, which is called The Story of a Soul.
